Pass With Flying Colors (PWFC) offers economical opportunities Chicago's disadvantaged communities are increasing college graduation rates among low-income, first-generation students. Our mission is to prepare Chicago's under-first generation students for college and career success. Since 2010, PWFC programs have provided first-generation students with high-touch support, experiential learning opportunities, and vital guidance on college applications, financial assistance, and career development throughout high school and college. Causes: Education, Education Services Mission: Pass the flying colors prepared by Chicago's understaffed high school students to succeed in college and life. Programs: Pass the flying colors of Inc. (an organization) is a nonprofit organization founded in Illinois in 2010 to prepare Chicago's under-taught high school students to succeed in college. Pass with flying colors provides eight-year college access and perseverance program currently serves 93 students. Currently, 85% of the organization's scientists identify as low-income and 100% of scientists will be the first in their family to attend college. Starting from the 9th grade, the organization selects up to 25 committed groups of students in a selective and competitive interview process. Starting immediately, these cohorts of scientists participate in academic enrichment, leadership development, and college readiness programs that develop social, academic and non-cognitive skills that are essential to college and career success. Organization scientists continue to receive personalized support and mentoring during the college years so that their college degree becomes a reality. 100% of scientists who have reached high school graduation are matriculated into college to achieve a degree and 97% are on track to graduate. Earning a 4-year college degree will provide greater access to economic stability and adult life choices. If it's a nonprofit, add geographic service areas to create a map in your profile.
